than the figures of his oratory. There are earnestness in his history bespeaking deep strength of conviction, but a mixed audience cannot always follow him through the processes by which this conviction was attained. The Corn Laws were against the feelings of the Corn Laws in 1838 was a complete revolution in the feelings of the different deputations, and this circumstance not a little aggravated their disappointment at the decisive rejection of the motion.

The deputies met to determine the line of conduct which ought to be adopted under the circumstances. Mr. Cobden, in the course of this session, cited the case of the Hants cattle commission, and suggested that the League of England should form a similar league for the defence of their mutual interests. "An Anti-Corn Law League!" exclaimed a voice; "Yes," repeated Mr. Cobden, and the proposal was accepted by the assembly. An executive council was formed, having its head-quarters in Manchester, with power to control the entire movement, and to publish a paper, called the Political Journal, as the organ of the body; and to summon such meetings as circumstances might render necessary.

Mr. George Wilson was appointed chairman of the first meeting, though he had previously already acquired a high reputation in Manchester, for his skill and sagacity in the management of public business; but few could have suspected the rare administrative talent which he had, and the extraordinary energy and fertility in resources, his untiring industry, and what is still more rare, his infallible sagacity in selecting instruments. Cool and unobtrusive, yet the most winning manner, but quite unassuming in his demeanour, Mr. Wilson is probably the only man in the League who could adequately fulfil the multifarious duties he has undertaken.

Another member, Messrs. Mr. Wilson as the Agamemnon, Mr. Cobden as the Ulysses, and Mr. Bright as the Ajax of the League. However travel and eloquence may identify Mr. Cobden with his classical parallel, there is one difference between the two heroes of Iliad and Telemach; he was not a particle of jealousy towards his compeer. Never did two men take the lead in a public movement, who so completely shared equal harmony and concert. Mr. Bright is a most judicious frame and sanguine temperament than his associate; there is more force in his action, more energy in his voice, and more sarcasm in his attack. He has, too, a more impetuous character. Friends there is a bold and warlike spirit manifest in his tone, attitude, and gesture, which seems ready to encourage if not to provoke hostility. Experience has calmed down much of this, and he now speaks calmly and rarely speaks without being roused to an enthusiasm, which he does not fail to communicate to his audience.

The League has been formed, and commenced its functions, and the movement. The Council was composed of all who contributed £50 or upwards to the common cause: there were 321 such members, some of whom gave upwards of £1,000. The sums raised by subscription were £10,000 in 1839, £50,000 in 1843, and £116,000 in 1846. On the last occasion of collecting a subscription, £20,000 was raised in Manchester alone. In addition to the funds thus obtained from bazaars and expositions of industry; that of Manchester in 1843 produced £10,000; that held in Covent Garden last summer produced £25,000; to which must be added about £10,000 more, to make up the total amount of money sent to Manchester during the last month.

The first journal started by the League was the "The Anti-Bread Tax Circular," published in Manchester, which is now superseded by the League, published in London, which circulates throughout the country, and sends every subscriber of a pound to the common fund annually being entitled to a copy during the year of its publication.

In February, 1845, the League resorted to meet in London, and the result was important. The first public meeting was held at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, where such crowds assembled, that the great room was unable to contain the number of persons present. In consequence, and some of the speakers quitted the platform to address the multitudes that crowded the hall and the staircase. In consequence of the increasing anxiety evinced by the inhabitants of the south of England, the League Drury Lane Theatre. The crowds that flocked thither increased on every successive evening, and the interest which the public took in the discussion of the bread tax was never greater. Drury Lane the League removed to Covent Garden, where its meetings have now been held for two years. It was in Covent Garden that the chairman of the League reported that the large subscription of £60,000. He attested that the council had distributed nine millions of tracts; that their paid lecturers had in one day visited 100,000 persons, and that the principal towns of the empire had been visited by deputations, consisting chiefly of Colonel Thompson, Messrs. Cobden, Bright, Ashworth, and Wilson.

There are many more memorable in the history of the League than the contested election for the City of London in the summer of 1845. The free trade candidate, Mr. Pattison, was opposed by Mr. Francis Baring, who had not the support of the League, but who was backed by an immense weight of private interest in the city. Under these circumstances, the success of Mr. Pattison was secured on all hands by the support of the League, and the result was proclaimed the League "a great fact." In subsequent elections the Leaguers have for the most part been unsuccessful; their defeat in South Lancashire in 1847, however, was a severe blow. Mr. Cobden proposed a plan for increasing the strength of the free traders in the counties by the purchase of forty shilling freeholds, and under the direction of the council more than a million pounds of money has been expended for this object.

It has been a great object of the council of the League to show that the Corn Laws are not less injurious to the agriculturist than to the manufacturer. To this end they have issued essays on this subject, for which prizes were awarded; and Mr. Cobden, during the course of last session, moved for a committee to inquire into the effect of protection on agriculture. Several farmers, however, have taken an active share in the meetings at Covent Garden, and among others, Earl Ducie, the most energetic of our present agricultural writers.

Among the speakers who have taken an active part in the meetings at Covent Garden, we may notice Lord Radnor, who, as Lord Folkestone, was a very conspicuous member of the League, and who has since been prominent during the Percival and Liverpool administrations. Age has chilled the fire of his story, but it has also improved its temper. He speaks with great fluency, in a plain, unadorned style, and his words are full of sense and truth. His son, the Hon. "Mr. Bouvier," the member for Kilmarnock, is also one of the League, and has occasionally spoken at Covent Garden.

There is perhaps no person better qualified to write with the pen than Mr. Milner Gibson. A great portion of his success—must indeed, be attributed to his natural advantages—a graceful person, brilliant eyes, a winning smile, a bland and agreeable countenance, and a clear and notes of melody. We have no modern speaker who at all can compare with him in the music of the voice. His style of eloquence is playfully witty, his illustrations, usually most felicitous, and his language, though often somewhat over heart appears a well-spring of perpetual good humour; and hence, though he has many political opponents, he has not a single enemy. It is generally known that Mr. Milner Gibson resigned his seat, and appealed again to his constituents. Having been defeated, he refused to be elected, and was afterwards invited to become a candidate for Manchester, and after a sharp contest with Sir George Murray, was returned for that important borough. Since that time, his connection with the League has been cemented by his close attention to the local business of the town, and the great skill and knowledge which he has displayed in the discussion of commercial questions.

Other members of Parliament who are advocates of the League are Messrs. Mr. Ricardo, Mr. Christie, and Mr. O'Connell, are among the thing astonishes the Chinamen who visit merchants at Hong-kong so much as the ceremony which is paid by our countrymen to air ladies, and the position, which the latter permitted to hold in society. The very wants express their disgust at seeing our ladies permitted to sit at table with their lords, and to be seen by our men as to forget their dignity. A young English merchant recently his wife with him to Hong-kong, where couple were visited by a wealthy mandarin.

 The latter regarded the lady attentively, and was so much struck with her looks and her movements. When she at length left the apartment, he said to her husband, in his imperfect English, "What you give for that wifey yours?" "Oh," replied the husband, "nothing at the singular rate of his visitor's whether the young merchant was more amazed at the rate, but the grave air of the Chinaman convinced him that the rate was not a joke.

 was compelled, therefore, to refuse the offer as much placidity as he could assume.
 The mandarin was, however, pressing, and went on to say 7000 dollars. The merchant, who of no previous notion of the commodity which had taken out with him, was compelled at length to declare that Englishmen never sold their wives after they once came into their possession as well with delight as the Chinese man to believe. The merchant afterwards had hearty laugh with his young wife, when he said that he had just discovered her full value as the mandarin had offered him 7000 dollars for her.
